Understanding Your Loss

Some of the complex emotions that parents have after losing one or both of their babies

Coping with the loss of your babies

- The loss of your dreams for the future – the life your family would have had together
- Having no visual image of what your babies would have looked like.

Loss of a unique parenting experience

- Feeling cheated of the special experience of having a twin, triplet or higher order pregnancy
- Feeling heartbroken at the sight of a double buggy and jealous of other pregnant women, especially those expecting twins
- Not being acknowledged as a parent of twins by others
- Sadness for others' loss, especially surviving twins, partners and siblings.

A general sense of loss about life itself

- Feeling that a part of you has died
- Feeling abandoned by God or that life has no meaning anymore
- Loss of trust in life and your body, which you may feel has betrayed you
- Feeling frightened by not knowing what you believe in anymore.

Dealing with your feelings

- The pain of not knowing why and feeling tortured by the 'what if' question – could you have done anything differently?
- The mistaken idea that you didn't love your babies enough to keep them alive
- Regret or guilt about worries you may have had about being a parent to twins
- Feeling out of control – worrying that this amount of grief cannot be normal
- Feeling ashamed or that you have let others down, even though this feeling is completely unjustified.

Dealing with your loss around others

- Coping with other people's insensitive comments or thoughtless attitudes, some with the best of intentions
- Dealing with your feelings over others' pregnancies, especially those expecting twins or due around the time your babies would have been born
- A continuing sense of loss about what the future holds
- Not knowing how long your feelings will last or if you'll ever be the same again
- The possible loss of your last chance of having a baby because of age, an inability to pay or be eligible for further fertility treatment
- The anxiety felt for subsequent pregnancies.
